

In “The War Between The Classes”, a novel, written by Gloria Miklowitz and originally published 1985, a girl named Emiko participates in a special race-representing colour game. The specific chapter is about a beauty contest of men within the context of mentioned game.

The chapter starts with the main character Amy's realization, of how the game changed some of the students. As she proceeds to class, she looks forward to the beauty contest. After discussing sexist statements by some boys, the contest starts. Some of the boys bail out and hide their body, some engage in the contest and embrace the cheers and shouts of the girls. After the contest, the girls judged the boys by their performance and visuals. The final contest is decided by the opinion of the highest voted participants on sexism and women. The chapter ends with the main characters boyfriends realization, that he's been sexist and that he should put a stop to it.